

Are you interested becoming a Certified Teacher!

Do you hold a bachelor's degree or higher? If so, you may be closer to becoming a certified teacher than you think!

Not everyone earned a college degree with the intent of becoming a teacher. That's why the Florida Department of Education has an alternate route to becoming certified.

The list of Florida Certification Coverages and the Frequently Acceptable Degree Majors on the following pages is a guide to the various degree majors and corresponding areas of certification. If you find that your degree is a match, why not apply for certification?

The Florida Department of Education's online application system requires the completed application, the application fee and an official sealed transcript to process your application. Once all items are received, the FLDOE will process your application and send you an Official Statement of Eligibility. This is the document that will advise as to your eligibility for certification and the next steps in the process.

If you are not eligible for the area of certification for which you applied, don't worry. Most coverages are attainable through the passing of a Subject Area Exam. There are some exceptions which require a specific graduate degree such as Educational Leadership, School Counseling, School Psychologist, School Social Worker, Reading (K-12) and Speech Language Impaired.

The Human Resources Department cannot evaluate your transcript to determine your initial eligibility. However, the Human Resources Department has a Certification Specialist on staff that can guide you through the next steps once you have received your Statement of Eligibility.
